For your Consideration.

I caught the tail end of sailing school this afternoon at my home club. Despite a calm northerly breeze this morning, the sea had turned to an angry sou'wester. It was the first day at West Dennis (a later start than most programs due to several schools not getting out until this week). What I noticed though was the smiles on the faces of the kids and the dedication of the instructors. The beginning of any season is always great - full of hope and anticipation of greatness. Kids are making new friends or re-connecting with their "summer friends." Instructors are putting their training to good use and are excited to pass along the tricks of the trade to the next generation. It is truly magical. I asked my son, "how was today?" And rather than the typical one-word, tween response, was a statement full of these thoughts. He is ready. Everything is all teed up at our clubs - let's make 2017 a year to remember.

Happy 4th of July to all.
